Appendices

Appendices are supplementary materials relevant to the thesis but too long or detailed to be included in the body of the research. They may be included at the end of the book because they support or validate conclusions. Examples include presentation boards, questionnaires/surveys, raw data, transcripts of interviews, maps, charts, and correspondence. Appendices are optional and included at the discretion of the researcher. If you are unsure ask your thesis instructor. Each item must be included on a separate page, include a heading, and be listed as Appendix A, Appendix B etc. If used, Appendices must be listed in the Contents.
